Mothers Meet at School To Discuss Problems

How can parents help children grow up? That's the idea behind a plan now being tried at Wood elementary school.

It's a simple plan, consisting of nothing more than a monthly bull session between parents and teachers for the purpose of discussing mutual problems and comparing methods of solving them.

For instance: When should mothers step in or stay out of children's arguments?

This was the topic of discussion last Thursday when Mrs. William Person met with mothers of her kindergarten pupils.

A number of ideas emerged from the informal discussion which, taken together, resulted in a good analysis of the situation.

Two Occasions

It was agreed, for instance, that the time to step in without a shadow of a doubt is when bodily harm or property damage are involved.

There was a difference of opinion as to what to do in such a case, however.

One mother thought that a child should be made to apologize. Another mother believed that such apologies are never sincere and that it is better to reason with the child using the following approach: I know you're mad. I won't let you hurt someone else, though, and I won't let anyone else hurt you, either.

Other Problems

Other problems discussed were what to do when 1) children in one family are involved, 2) one's own children and neighborhood children are involved, 3) whether younger brothers or sisters should play with older brothers or sisters, 4) and what to do when one child is invited to play with a neighbor's child and the other is not.

These meetings have been scheduled for mothers of kindergarten and first grade students. Principal Robert Evans stated.

The great value of these meetings lies in the fact that parents in the same neighborhood get to know each other and come to discover that they all have pretty much the same problems with their children, Evans said.
